Over the past couple of decades, many colleges and universities have vastly improved in terms of campus climate for LGBTQA+ communities, and more than ever, students, faculty, and staff are living openly as LGBTQA+.

In spite of these improvements, transphobia and queerphobia, as well as cisnormative and heteronormative policies, are still frequent fixtures throughout the United States and, as a result, on college campuses. Many individuals are still unable to come out as LGBTQA+, fearing repercussions that include professional discrimination, harassment, and physical violence. Experiences of transphobia and homophobia can have detrimental and lasting impacts on an individual's physical, emotional, and social well-being, and a negative campus climate has been causally linked to issues with recruitment and retention of LGBTQA+ students, especially queer and trans Students of Color. As is evident in the SafeZone "Campus Safety and Climate" video, UofA is not immune to these issues, and LGBTQA+ students continue to experience marginalization on our campus.

The implementation LGBTQA+-affirming policies coupled with on-going commitment to challenging all instances of heteronormativity and cisnormativity, racism, xenophobia, sexism, ableism, and classism on campus is vital in making any campus a safe, supportive environment for all LGBTQA+ students, faculty, and staff.
